8:00am – 12:30pm      New Legal Service Delivery – Session Block I

Until recently, almost all legal services have been delivered by law firms, or the law departments of businesses and organizations. That is not true anymore. Every day more and more work is being done by alternative legal service providers, overseas LPOs, and self-service models, all of which leverage technology to maximize productivity. This session block will focus on all the new opportunities clients have in buying new services—and the opportunities firms have in delivering them—as well as the technology backbone behind them.

There has never been more noise in the legal marketplace about any technology as there is today about Artificial Intelligence. Every day we see more articles, press releases, conferences, webinars, and more about how “AI will impact the future of legal.” AI has the potential to change not only how legal work gets done, but also, through its value as a predictive mechanism, what legal work gets done. This session block is designed to help attendees better understand what AI is, what it can do in the context of the legal function, and how to leverage AI tools for your firm’s or department’s benefit.
